PREFACE

The Inventory of Federal Archives in the States is one of the products of the work of the Survey of Federal Archives, which operated as a nation-wide project of the Works Progress Administration from January 1, 1936 to June 30, 1937, and has been continued since that date as a unit of the Historical Records Survey, also operating as a nation-wide project of the Works Progress Administration, and a group of state or local projects of that Administration and of the Work Projects Administration.

The plan for the organization of the Inventory is as follows:

Series I consists of reports on the administration of the Survey, acknowledgments, and general discussions of the location, condition, and content of federal archives in the states. Succeeding series contain the detailed information secured by workers of the Survey, in inventory form, a separate series number being assigned to each of the executive departments (except the Department of State) and other major units of the Federal Government. Within each series No. 1 is a general introduction to the field organization and records of the governmental agency concerned; the succeeding numbers contain the inventory proper, separate numbers being assigned to each state in alphabetical order. Thus, in each series, the inventory for Alabama is No. 2, that for Arizona, No. 3, that for Arkansas No. 4, etc.

For each local office information regarding each series, or unit of related records, is presented in the following order: title, inclusive dates ("to date" indicating an open file at the time the information was secured), general description of informational content, description of the system of filing or indexing (if any), a statement of frequency and purpose of use, form of the record itself (bound volumes, sheets in folders, etc.), linear footage, description of the containers, physical condition of the records (not stated if satisfactory), location by room number or other identifying information, and finally, the number of the Form 58SA on which this information was originally recorded by a Survey worker and from which it was abstracted for the Inventory. This form is on file in The National Archives. When it contains substantial information on addenda sheets which has not been included in the mimeographed abstract, indication of this is given by use of the reference "See addenda."

In Ohio the work of the Survey was under the direction of Dr. William D. Overman with Mr. William M. Verross as his assistant until February 15, 1937. At that time Mr. Verross became director and served until February 1938. Since then Federal archives work has been under the technical direction of the Ohio Historical Records Survey Project. Dr. John H. McMinn, in charge of the Federal Archives unit, assisted by Mr. Wilbert R. Bruce, classified and edited the materials. This inventory of the records of the Federal Courts was prepared in the Columbus office of the Survey and was edited, before final typing, by Mr. R. R. Stenberg of the Washington office.

INTRODUCTION

The Ordinance of 1787 provided the legal basis for the first judiciary in the Northwest Territory. The Ordinance provided for a court of three judges, any two of whom might hold court, and the Governor was given power to make proper divisions of the territory for judicial purposes. The Ordinance of 1787 was continued in 1789 by the first Congress under the Constitution, and it was supplemented by further acts of Congress.

The operation of the Territorial courts in the Ohio country was unsatisfactory. During the period from 1787 to 1803 eight judges were appointed, only two of whom were from the territory itself.¹ The frequent and extended absences from the territory of the judges appointed from localities at a distance caused many complaints from the people and the Territorial Secretary to be lodged with the Governor, the Secretary of State, and the President.² Nevertheless, the Governor seems to have guarded jealously his right to designate the places where court sessions should be held. Furthermore he made no definite divisions of the Territory into judicial districts, as was his duty under the Ordinance. At best, court sessions were seldom held, even in the principal towns, and much less frequently in the more remote communities, where the judges were sometimes forced to "go the circuit" in river boats bought especially for the purpose.³ The Secretary, who was also the Acting Governor of the Territory, complained in a letter to the Governor that "The general court is but annual any where and not known at all in the two western Counties -- ."⁴ These difficulties were partially remedied, however, in 1795, by a modification of the Ordinance giving a single judge instead of two the power to hold court, and by a repeal of the statute of limitations.⁵

Under these circumstances it was natural that the records of the territorial courts were few and ill preserved. Dr. Clarence E. Carter says: "The judicial records of the Northwest Territory did not become at any time a part of the territorial archives of the National Government,"⁶ and the Survey of Federal Archives in Ohio found no trace of such records in the depositories of the present Federal courts.

When Ohio became a state in 1803 Congress made it one judicial district,⁷ and stipulated that one judge should hold annual sessions "at the seat of government."⁸ A district attorney and a marshal were provided. Because Chillicothe was "the seat of government," the first Federal court in Ohio was held in that city. Some of the records of this first Federal court in Ohio are now in the custody of the district clerk in Cincinnati, because there are records there dating from as early as 1803.

From 1803 to 1807 Congress made no reorganization of the Federal judiciary in Ohio. Ohio grew rapidly, and the location of the Federal Land Office at Chillicothe in 1800 gave the city increased court business through land transactions and consequent litigation.⁹ In 1807 Ohio became part of the Seventh Circuit,¹⁰ and circuit court sessions were held at Chillicothe, thereby making that city the first place in the state where both district and circuit courts were held.

Similarly, in 1807, land offices were also established in Cincinnati, Marietta, and Steubenville.¹¹ By 1816 the politicians of Columbus had effected the removal of the capital to their city. Four years later, by an act of March 4, 1820, Congress provided that "the District Court for the Ohio District ... be held in Columbus."¹² Thus the chief Federal judicial unit was moved to the political center of the state.

An act of 1842 transferred the district and circuit courts from Columbus to Cincinnati,¹³ where they have since remained. The same act ⁸It is interesting to note that his annual salary was but $1000.

⁹The rapid growth of population in Ohio is evidenced by these census figures: 1800 (first year for which figures are available), 45,365; 1810, 230,760; and 1820, 581,434. The population growth of various of the early counties is shown by the following table:

Franklin (Columbus)	Not taken	3486	10,292

provided for optional sessions of district court at Cleveland. An act of 1855 divided the state into two judicial districts, and provided for terms of circuit and district courts at Cincinnati for the Southern District and at Cleveland for the Northern District.¹⁴ This division made possible the elimination of the Columbus units until 1880, when they were permanently reestablished.¹⁵

For twenty-odd years after 1855 Congress was occupied with the problems of slavery, the sectional conflict, and Reconstruction. The exigencies of the Civil War crisis necessitated the suspension of normal judicial processes, the institution of martial law in certain states, and arbitrary arrest in others, including Ohio.¹⁶ A much-needed judicial reorganization had therefore to await a return to more settled conditions.

By 1878 this need was evident, and the Northern District was divided into Eastern and Western divisions, Cleveland being named the seat of the Eastern, and Toledo of the Western.¹⁷ The law stated, however, that no additional clerk was to be appointed, and that records and papers pertaining to cases in the Western division were to be transferred to the deputy clerk at Toledo. This would make it reasonable to assume that a deputy clerk had been created at Toledo in 1872, when optional sessions of the district court were authorized for that city. No mention of that fact, however, was made in the law.¹⁸

¹⁴Ibid., X, 604. The counties of Belmont, Guernsey, Muskingum, Licking, Franklin, Madison, Champaign, Shelby, and Mercer, "together with all that part of the State lying south of the above-mentioned counties," were to compose the Southern District, and all the remaining part of the state was to comprise the Northern District.

¹⁵Ibid., XXI, 64.

¹⁶The case of Clement L. Vallandigham, Representative from Ohio, is one in point. General Burnside, in charge of the Department of the Ohio at Cincinnati, issued General Order No. 38 declaring his intention of arresting anyone expressing sympathy for the enemy. Vallandigham declared in effect that this order was a "usurpation of arbitrary authority." General Burnside had him arrested. Tried by a military commission at Cincinnati, Vallandigham declared that inasmuch as he was not a soldier such a tribunal had no jurisdiction over him and demanded a civil trial by common law. Sentenced to confinement for the duration of the war, Vallandigham saw his sentence commuted to exile within the Confederacy. Roseboom and Weisenburger, op. cit., 280-281. For other aspects of this same general problem see James G. Randall, Constitutional Problems under Lincoln (New York, 1926), especially chs. vi, vii, viii, and xiii.

¹⁷The following counties were to constitute the Western division: Allen, Auglaize, Defiance, Delaware, Erie, Fulton, Hancock, Hardin, Henry, Huron, Logan, Lucas, Marion, Mercer, Ottawa, Paulding, Putnam, Sandusky, Seneca, Union, Van Wert, Williams, Wood, and Wyandot. The remaining counties were to constitute the Eastern division. United States Statutes at Large, XX, 101.

¹⁸United States Statutes at Large, XVII, 157-158.

In 1880 an act of Congress provided that the Southern District should be divided into Western and Eastern divisions. Cincinnati and Columbus were to be the seats of these divisions. Circuit court was also to meet in Columbus. Certain counties were taken from the Northern District and put into the Southern, namely, Union, Delaware, Morrow, Knox, Coshocton, Harrison, and Jefferson.¹⁹ This arrangement remained in effect during the next decade. A minor change was made in the judicial districts in 1891 when Logan County was detached from the Northern District, Western division, and attached to the Eastern division, Southern District.²⁰ In the same year the ten Circuit Courts of Appeals were established to relieve the Supreme Court of a rapidly increasing business which it could not successfully handle.²¹

After 1891 Federal court business increased so rapidly in the Northern District that an extra district judge was provided in 1900.²² Circuit and district courts were made optional at Youngstown in 1909,²³ and an extra district judge for both the Northern and Southern Districts was added at the same time. In the Western division, Southern District, optional sessions at Dayton were provided for in 1911.²⁴ Section 289 of this same act abolished the old circuit courts and transferred their records to the custody of the district courts. The latter were also given much of the jurisdiction previously enjoyed by the circuit courts.²⁵

In 1915 Ohio was again redistricted, and regular terms of district court were provided for Youngstown in the Eastern division, Northern District. Optional terms of district court were provided for Steubenville, in the Eastern division, Southern District. Dayton was to have regular district court terms, and the court that sat there was to have cognizance of any or all cases arising in the Southern District.²⁶ Optional sessions of the district court were provided in 1923 for Lima, in the Western division, Northern District.²⁷ The boundaries of the Sixth Circuit were slightly modified in 1928, and an additional judge was provided for the circuit. In May 1938 Congress, in what was termed the "twenty-judgeship" bill, provided an additional judgeship in the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals, and in February 1939 President Roosevelt appointed a judge to this position.²⁸

In 1898 Congress passed an act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States.²⁹ By this act the office of Referee in Bankruptcy was created. Courts of bankruptcy were given the power to appoint the referees. Their term was to be two years. The fact that these officers are appointed by the courts makes it especially difficult to ascertain for any one city exactly when the Referee was appointed. Often the information gathered from the Referees themselves is indefinite. The same difficulty is encountered in attempting to ascertain when the United States Commissioner was instituted in any particular city.

Federal courts have been held continuously at Cincinnati since they were first established in 1842. By the same act Federal courts were authorized for Cleveland. In that year an "adjourned" term for that city was made optional with the judge for the Ohio District,³⁰ and this arrangement was not altered until 1855. In that year, when Ohio was divided into Northern and Southern Districts, Cleveland, the largest city in the former district, was designated as the seat of the Federal courts therein. District and circuit court sessions were provided. Before this arrangement could go into effect the heavy demands for Federal litigation in this area led Congress to authorize "special" terms for the district and circuit courts at Cleveland for the same year.³¹ Further acts, of 1872³² and 1878,³³ authorized optional sessions at Toledo in the Northern District, but Cleveland continued as the center of the Federal court system in Northern Ohio.

The Columbus district court has naturally been affected directly or indirectly by the many general alterations in the geographical limitations and jurisdictional scope that have been made in the district courts since the War between the States. Examples of such changes are to be found in the act of March 2, 1867, by which the district courts became courts of bankruptcy,³⁴ The act of March 3, 1891, which established the Circuit Courts of Appeals,³⁵ also modified the jurisdiction of the district courts. The important shift of records to the district courts caused by the abolition of the circuit courts in 1912³⁶ affected the jurisdiction of the district court in Columbus and elsewhere. A multitude of other acts have altered the time for holding court sessions in Columbus and elsewhere in the state and in the United States, but these have had no fundamental bearing upon the nature of or the methods of preserving the records of the local courts.

Congress first authorized district and circuit courts to be held in Toledo in May 1872.³⁷ Two sessions were to be held annually, but court business was not sufficient to warrant permanent establishment; by an act six years later, however, Toledo was made the center of the Northern District, Western division. In 1923 the district judge for the Northern District, Western division, was ordered to hold optional sessions at Lima.³⁸ This arrangement has remained unchanged. In 1898 a Referee in Bankruptcy and a United States Commissioner were established in Toledo.

Optional district court sessions were authorized for Dayton by the Judiciary Act of 1911;³⁹ but during the next four years the district judges at Cincinnati seldom deemed such sessions necessary. Because of the proximity of Dayton to the district courts in Cincinnati most of the Federal actions originating in Dayton were tried in the Cincinnati courts. Regular district court terms were provided for Dayton by an act of 1915,⁴⁰ and such court sessions were promptly instituted. No special district judge, however, was assigned to this court. In 1923 Congress continued its provision for "optional" district court sessions at Dayton, and it has not seen fit since then to change this arrangement.
